

Delegate365 provides delegation, automation and auditing in one single web-based tool

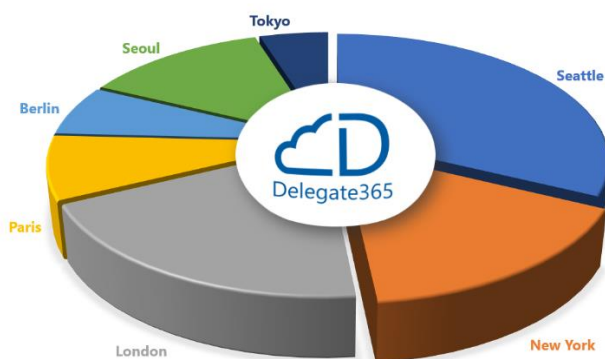

Delegate365 fills a gap in enterprises

In the Microsoft 365 world, global administrators can create roles for privileged users to execute special tasks like user and group management. In fact, such users can administer all users or all licenses.

That may be ok for small companies and associations, but in larger companies it becomes necessary to ensure that administrators or business office managers can administer only their own units.

That's where Delegate365 comes in. Instead of needing to use standard roles, portal administrators can define any number of organizational units, who will administer a unit and what licenses a unit can use.

The scope administrators can manage their own users and create their own groups and teams as well within their predefined scope. Delegate365 simplifies all these tasks by functioning as new standard portal with advanced management features.

Delegate365 is a user-friendly, web-based portal for user, group and license management that allows to split a single Microsoft 365 tenant into smaller, manageable organizational units. Each organizational unit can use Delegate365 to manage itself within the defined scopes. Delegate365 is based on three pillars and supports delegation, automation and auditing.

Automation and Auditing

Companies that invest in automation are more successful in the long term. Delegate365 supports self-service and automation of user and group management and supports these processes up to auditing and reporting. This noticeably relieves the IT department.

Typical customers of Delegate365 are larger businesses, companies with multiple departments or locations, franchisers, educational facilities, clubs, associations and any group who uses Microsoft 365 and wants to use delegated administration for managing only their own units with automation and reporting.
